USPA NEWS - The actor and filmmaker Viggo Mortensen will receive a Donostia Award in recognition of his career at the 68th edition of the San Sebastian Festival, where the North American star will present the film 'Falling', his directorial debut. The movie, which closed the Sundance Festival and is one of those selected for the Festival de Cannes, will have its European premiere at San Sebastian.

'Falling' stars the veteran Lance Henriksen and Mortensen himself, who also penned the screenplay. The two embody a father and son whose different worlds collide in this family drama produced by the actor's label, Perceval Pictures, together with Ingenious, Hanway Films, Scythia Films and Zephyr Films. Its release is scheduled for October 2 in Spain, where the film will be distributed by Caramel Films and Youplanet Pictures.

In the last 35 years, Viggo Mortensen has participated in around fifty films by filmmakers including David Cronenberg, Peter Weir, Jane Campion, Peter Jackson, Gus Van Sant, Brian de Palma, Agustín Díaz Yanes, Ana Piterberg, Lisandro Alonso, David Oelhoffen, Peter Farrelly and Matt Ross. He has left his stamp on all of them, no matter what the genre. Not only was he part of the cast of the fantasy trilogy 'The Lord of the Rings', where he played the immortal Aragorn, but he has also landed three Academy Award nominations for 'Eastern Promises' (David Cronenberg, 2007), 'Captain Fantastic' (Matt Ross, 2016) and 'Green Book' (Peter Farrelly, 2018).

Born in New York in 1958 to a Danish father and North American mother, Viggo Mortensen spent a large part of his childhood in Argentina where, among other things, he learned Spanish, one of the many languages he speaks. On returning to his native country, he studied drama and worked in theatre. His first movie role was with Harrison Ford in 'Witness' (Peter Weir, 1985), a crime thriller in which he played an Amish farmer.

In his early days he cultivated genre cinema, appearing in sequels such as 'Leatherface: Texas Chainsaw Massacre III' (Jeff Burr, 1989), where he was the brother to the legendary cannibal, and the western 'Young Guns' (Geoff Murphy, 1990). He soon started landing his first starring parts, as the mysterious inmate of 'Prison' (Renny Harlin, 1987), as the elder brother in the disturbing cult movie 'The Reflecting Skin' (Philip Ridley, 1990) and as the Vietnam veteran in 'The Indian Runner' (1991), Sean Penn's debut as a director.

In the decade of the '90s he worked for filmmakers such as Brian de Palma ('Carlito's Way', 1993), Tony Scott ('Crimson Tide', 1995), Jane Campion ('The Portrait of a Lady', 1996) and Ridley Scott ('G.I. Jane', 1997). Shortly after making his first appearances in Spanish productions, including 'Gimlet' (José Luis Acosta, Zabaltegi-New Directors, 1995) and 'La pistola de mi hermano' (Ray Loriga, 1996), he played in two Alfred Hitchcock remakes by Andrew Davis ('A Perfect Murder', 1998) and Gus Van Sant ('Psycho', 1998).

It was with the change of millennium that Mortensen saw his figure shoot to stardom thanks to the adaptation of the fantasy trilogy 'The Lord of the Rings', directed by Peter Jackson, based on the book by J.R.R. Tolkien. A huge success with the public, the actor brought life to the character of Aragorn in 'The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring' (2001), 'The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers' (2002) and 'The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King' (2003). He subsequently continued to brandish a sword, this time as the intrepid captain of the Spanish Golden Age, in 'Alatriste' (2006), the super-production directed by Agustín Díaz Yanes.

He was also an everyman hounded by a dark past in 'A History of Violence' (2005), the first of his three collaborations with David Cronenberg, under whose orders he once again became a Russian mobster employee in 'Eastern Promises' (2007), which was the opening film, counting with his presence of the Official Selection at the San Sebastian Festival and which landed him his first Academy Award nomination, and then played the self-same Sigmund Freud in 'A Dangerous Method' (2011).

In the last decade he has participated in other literary adaptations such as 'The Road' (John Hillcoat, 2008) and 'On The Road' (Walter Salles, 2011), based on the books by Cormac McCarthy and Jack Kerouac, respectively. As an actor and producer he has lent his talent to Argentine films like 'Todos tenemos un plan' (Ana Piterberg, 2012) and 'Jauja' (Lisandro Alonso, Horizontes Latinos, 2014), with which he returned to San Sebastian. His last two Academy Award nominations were for 'Captain Fantastic' (Matt Ross, 2016), in which he plays the part of a widowed father raising his six children in the wilderness, and for his work in the Best Film Oscar winner, 'Green Book' (Peter Farrelly, 2018), in which he was the chauffeur for the Afro-American pianist, Don Shirley.

As well as acting in, writing, producing and directing films, Mortensen also cultivates other arts such as painting, music, photography and literature. He is also the founder of Perceval Press, an independent publishing house specialising in art, critical writing and poetry.
